MEET THE PANTHERS

In wrestling, you need to walk a fine line between following what works best for others and separating yourself from the pack. Junior Julian Jimenez has done a remarkable job this summer, seeking out the best camps, clinics, and events across the country. We chatted with Jimenez on his jam packed schedule, (from Fargo, ND to York, PA) water polo, and overcoming his mental blocks.

How did you prepare for this season?

To prepare I did a lot of 1 on 1 work with Keenan, and I also went to various tournaments, and wrestled with some of the best wrestlers in Michigan at the national team practices.

What were Cadet Duals like?

The Cadet Duals were a lot of fun. It gave me a chance to see many different styles of wrestling and a lot of techniques. It was fun to be on a team as well.

Why did you decide on Fargo?

I decided to go to Fargo because why not really. I qualified so why not get more mat time, travel to a new place, and experience one of if not the biggest tournament in the country. I knew it would be a great experience and it was.

What are some of the hurdles you have to face?

A major hurdle I have to face is my mentality. Sometimes I'm not the most confident that I can beat someone. I feel like it really holds me back from my true potential as a wrestler and when I do overcome that hurdle I'll be turning heads.

How has water polo helped you prepare in the fall?

Water polo had helped a lot to get me in shape. We constantly move at practice so there really is no rest. You could almost say the same goes for wrestling because you always need to move to get the advantage. Also polo helps strengthen my legs something else very important in wrestling.

Who is your wrestling hero?

My wrestling hero is Keenan Montoya. Not only has he been helping me all summer to improve and get ready for all the tournaments I went to and for the regular season, but he also has the mentality I strive to have. Keenan is a really nice guy off the mat but on the mat he is brutal and he doesn't care who he is wrestling. I think I have already learned so much from him and he has a lot more knowledge for me.

MEET THE PANTHERS

Some wrestlers are born for success, relying on their natural talents. Others are molded and shaped in the flames of dedication and desire to be a champion. West Ottawa Freshman Mathew "Mad Dog" Hakken is the latter. We sat down with Hakken to discuss his upcoming season, and his arduous trek to becoming a dominating wrestler.

How did you prepare for the season?

The ways I prepared for this season are that I trained at Myrmidon during the off-season. I would work on everything from take downs, to break downs, pins. We concentrated on cardio to build my stamina for the season. I also picked up new moves at different camps that I attended throughout the summer.

What was being on a travel team like?

It was fun because I got to wrestle people from different areas that I would normally not get to wrestle. I wrestled some tough competitors from other areas. I became a better wrestler by wrestling people who were better than I am. I enjoyed getting to know my teammates better.

Why did you decide on Myrmidon?

We decided on Myrmidon because while working with Coach Lancaster he gave us information for Myrmidon. I started going there 3 1/2 years ago, and continued to go every week, all year round. I have been able to work with some amazing coaches, Coach Dan Kobo, Coach Ryan Lancaster, Coach Jeff Anderson, and Coach Jared Lancaster. These guys have taught me so much, and made me a much better wrestler.

What are some of the hurdles you have to face?

One of the major hurdles that I have is my size. I have a hard time finding people to practice with, which makes it difficult to work all the moves that we go over at Myrmidon. However, practicing with bigger guys has made me stronger, and tougher. By practicing with bigger guys, it makes it much easier to hit my moves on an opponent my size.

What is it like being in marching band and being a wrestler?

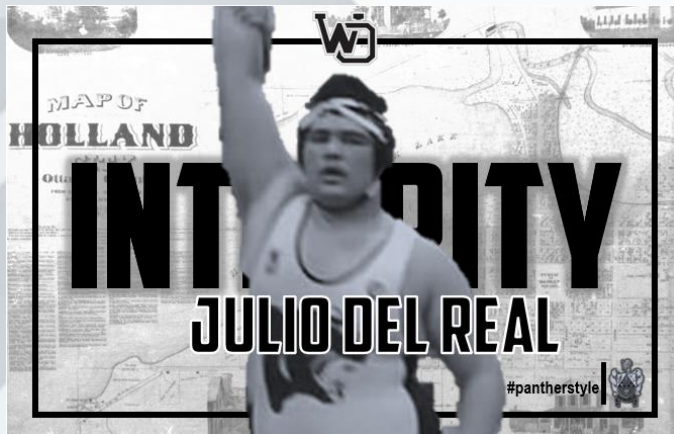

It's kind of hard because I have to get home right away to do my homework before practice. There is hardly a day that I am not busy. I also have to juggle my time between practices, which means I have to sometimes miss out on wrestling to participate in band practices.

Wrestling has helped me with band because it has made me stronger physically, as well as being able to keep up my stamina.

Who is your wrestling hero?

I look up to Coach Jared. I have worked with Jared first as a teammate, and then as my coach. He has worked really hard with me to improve my skills and make me the wrestler I am today. I look up to him, because he has had ups and downs in his high school career. He had set goals for himself, and shown me that sometimes you have to reach for your goals, and if you don't accomplish them, it's okay. You just keep moving forward and get better every time you step on the mat. He has encouraged me, and shown that he believes in me, not only as my coach but my teammate as well.

MEET THE PANTHERS

Fortune favors the hard workers. At least, that is how it works for a wrestler. We met up with senior West Ottawa wrestler Julio "the Real Deal" Del Real to discuss the upcoming season, We highlighted his off season work ethic, his aspirations and his inspirations.

How did you prepare for this season?

I went to work outs, (off season) tournaments and Kenowa Hills.

What was being on a travel team like?

It was cool; going outside of my comfort zone wrestling other people that I've never heard of before.

How were the Kenowa Hills Summer Knights Clinics?

I liked them, I plan on using some of the moves that I learned there.

What are some of the hurdles you have to face?

Confidence, pressure to do good and to leave high school and be remembered for something.

What has been for motivation in the off season?

"State titles are won by the ones who love the sport; keep strong to your faith and things will work out."

Who is your wrestling hero?

Ramon Correa, Ryan Lancaster and Jordan Burroughs
